

The idea that a service one has to pay for is a threat to a medium that is free over the air seems a little odd. If broadcast radio wants to keep their customers / listeners, perhaps they should offer programming people want to hear.

If XM radio is compliant with all applicable FCC regulations, then broadcast radio should not be allowed to drag down satellite radio solely because XM came up with a better business plan.

Jon Melvill